B. Course Aims and Features

Distinctive features of course

This programme is intended for students wishing to develop a career in the tourism and hospitality sectors. It is suitable for those with or without work experience in the sector as this may be gained as part of the course of study. The Subject Area's reputation (LSBU has taught Hospitality since 1987 and Tourism since 1993) is as one of the most vocational of the tourism and hospitality degree courses in England. The emphasis is on equipping students with the ability, skills and knowledge to successfully develop careers in tourism and hospitality companies or to start their own businesses.

Philosophy of the Scheme:

Contextualised Management Studies The philosophy underlying the Tourism and Hospitality Scheme is that of the contextualised management degree. Generic, transferable management skills and disciplines (i.e. Information Technology, Finance, Marketing and Human Resource Management) are contextualised to the specialist economic sector that is comprised of the Tourism and Hospitality industries.

These industries carry with them particular management issues peculiar to themselves. These include the social, cultural, economic and environmental impacts of their operation on the host communities and the influence of globalisation and product standardisation on individual destination areas. Therefore, there are specific ethical and management and development issues related to the functioning of the sector that the scheme explores, analyses and critically appraises.

The degree emphasises the management of strategic issues that arise in the sector, including marketing, business development and management, leadership, ethical and sustainability issues.

AQE October 2017 Page 2 of 13

It will be relevant to those wanting to develop their management careers or own businesses in the Tourism and Hospitality fields. It is the philosophy of this degree to encourage students to examine growth opportunities in Tourism and hospitality businesses and destinations.

It will, therefore, apply to both commercial and non-commercial elements of the sector, the latter often requiring public: private partnership forms of governance. It will seek to equip students with appropriate skills, tools and knowledge to operate innovatively in the global tourism and hospitality environments.

The nature of the teaching and assessment will allow students to apply the theories and processes learnt in class to their preferred setting (e.g. public or private sector; tourism or hospitality industries; UK, European or International)

Course Aims

The aims of the MSc International Tourism and Hospitality Management degree are:

- To ensure students gain an appropriate range and depth and critical appreciation of knowledge regarding the issues surrounding the management of tourism and hospitality organisations in the international business environment
- To equip students with an appropriate range of research, transferable and practical skills
- appropriate to them working within the international arena
- To ensure students develop an appropriate ethical approach to the tourism and hospitality management
- To instil in students the ability to work effectively, both independently and in collaboration, in order
- To solve issues surrounding the management of international tourism and hospitality businesses and other organisations
- To foster and develop within students the ability to generate creative and resourceful solutions to problems via the adoption of intellectually rigorous methods of enquiry
- To provide students with the opportunity to engage in reflective learning through the participation of practitioners in the teaching of the degree, via the analysis of their own experience and the
- evaluation of a field trip to a destination outside the UK.
- Demonstrate, through the satisfactory completion of a dissertation or extended management report, the ability to undertake a substantial self-managed field or desk research study that synthesises skills of problem and issue identification, research methodology, critical analysis and the drawing of logical conclusions.

C. Teaching and Learning Strategy

Core knowledge is developed through the lecture programme and students' self-managed learning. Deeper understanding is achieved through evaluative work in seminars and workshop sessions, and residential and day field study visits.

A range of techniques are used to help to ensure that the degree is both up to date and vocational (e.g. case study analysis, guest speakers, residential and day field trips, and applying theory to real-life examples and situations).

The opportunity to undertake an industrial placement gives first-hand experience of working life to those who feel they would benefit from it, and deepens understanding of practical and management problems in the students' chosen field of study.

Research Methods is taught throughout the degree introducing methodologies and techniques into the appropriate unit.

Transferable skills are taught and developed throughout the course. Students are expected to present and evidence work to a high standard and to develop clear and persuasive arguments. The nature of the company shadowing exercise requires a high degree of independent, self- organised, reflective learning.

Teaching will be by guidance in class and in personal tutorial requested by students. Where necessary students will be directed to the University's central support services to develop their academic and transferable skills

D. Assessment

Knowledge and understanding is assessed by coursework, examination, reflective study and analysis of industrial practice.

The above knowledge and understanding will be assessed using a variety of methods appropriate to Level 7.

Intellectual skills are developed in all assessments, especially those where the student is required to engage with industry and with real life examples to generate evaluative reports. In particular, the assessments in City Marketing; Business Strategy and Management; Marketing Strategy and Professional Leadership require industry engagement. The Critical Issues and Cross Cultural Management modules are more desk-based and develop students' ability to apply theory to evaluate issues using secondary data.

Communication skills are assessed through class presentations and in the ability of students to gather information for the company shadowing project. Data collection skills run throughout the course and culminate in the dissertation. Students are tested on their ability to generate strategic documents in City Marketing and Marketing Strategy.

Other assessments may include: computer based presentations; research reports, project work, reflective learning and exams.

E. Academic Regulations

The University's Academic Regulations apply for this course. Any course specific protocols will be identified here.

F. Entry Requirements

An undergraduate degree in any discipline at award level 2:2 or above. Overseas awards will be accepted subject to equivalence at this level.

Extensive work experience (usually 2 years or more at managerial level in the sector) may allow admission based on the faculty's APEL policy.

Access to the Top – Up route will be via 100 credits or more at Level 7 from the Post-Graduate Diplomas of The Confederation for Tourism and Hospitality and The Organisation for Tourism and Hospitality. Students will need at least half of their units at 'Credit / Merit' level or above, or as otherwise stated in the Articulation Agreements as they are up dated. Preference will be given to students that have a degree and/or have successfully completed an extended research project. Overseas, non-native English speakers will be required to have gained IELTS 6.5 / TOEFL 580 (paper based)

Applicants may be asked to participate in a group interview to aid the selection process.

G. Course structure(s)

Course overview

The degree is divided, pedagogically into two halves. Semesters 1 and 2 follow a traditional classroom based approach analysing theory and case studies. A field trip allows direct contact with industry players in an international situation. The students' self-management skills are then tested more fully in the undertaking of the Dissertation or Extended Management Report. We reserve the right to change the semesters in which the modules are taught.

This map provides a design aid to help course teams identify where course outcomes are being developed, taught and assessed within the course. It also provides a checklist for quality assurance purposes and may be used in validation, accreditation and external examining processes. Making the learning outcomes explicit will also help students to monitor their own learning and development as the course progresses.

Appendix B: Personal Development Planning

Personal Development Planning (PDP) is a structured process by which an individual reflects upon their own learning, performance and/or achievement and identifies ways in which they might improve themselves academically and more broadly. Course teams are asked to indicate where/how in the course/across the modules this process is supported.

Approach to PDP	Level 7
Αρρισασί το Ευτ	Level /
1 Supporting the development and recognition of skills through the personal tutor system.	Scheduled and ad hoc meetings with either the course director or a nominated personal tutor (depending on the size of the cohort)
2 Supporting the development and recognition of skills in academic modules/modules.	 Discussions in lectures and seminar activities. Sessions and advice provided by the university's central support services
